London Suite by Neil Simon

The autumn play this year is London Suite by Neil Simon. Or rather it is a collection of four short plays set in the same suite of a fashionable old hotel in London. In each playlet Simon sets a different tone, starting with a thriller, moving to a comedy, then to a comedy-drama, and finally a hilarious farce. London Suite contains Simon's characteristic witty dialogue, sight gags and unexpected moments of poignancy. What makes the play even more interesting is seeing a small group of actors portray all the various characters in the four different playlets.

The first story, Settling Accounts, has a writer holding a gun on his horrified agent who has stolen all of his money. In Going Home, a widow is shopping her way through London, while her daughter tries to couple her mother with a Scotsman who is allergic to marriage. In the poignant Diana & Sidney, Diana is in London and meets up with her ex-husband, who needs money for a friend dying of cancer. The fourth and final playlet, The Man on the Floor, is a farce that features Mark and Annie, two frantic tourists who have lost their Wimbledon tickets. When things could not get worse they do, of course. Mark's back goes out and a doctor is called in. Well, I won't tell you what happens next... except to say that Kevin Costner is scheduled to make his debut with the Players.

London Suite* opens on Thursday 20 November for 3 nights at Almscliffe Village Hall in Weeton. Curtain up at 7.45pm promptly.
